EXPERT REPORT OF ROBERT SPITZER

January 3, 2024

I have been asked to render an opinion by the City of New York Law Department about the history of, and historical legal analogs to, restrictions pertaining to stun guns and tasers.

This Report is based on my own personal knowledge, research, and experience, and if I am called to testify as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the truth of the matters discussed in this Report.

PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS

I am a Distinguished Service Professor of Political Science Emeritus at the State University of New York at Cortland. I was also a visiting professor at Cornell University for thirty years. I am currently an adjunct professor at the College of William and Mary School of Law. I earned my Ph.D. in Government from Cornell University. I reside in Williamsburg, Virginia. A copy of my complete curriculum vitae is attached as Exhibit A.

I am the author of 16 books on American politics subjects, including six on gun policy. I have been studying and writing about gun policy for nearly forty years. My first publication on the subject appeared in 1985. In addition to six books, I've written over one hundred articles, papers, and essays on gun policy. My expertise includes the history of gun laws, gun policy in American politics and related historical, legal, political, and criminological issues. My book, The Politics of Gun Control, has been in print since its initial publication in 1995. It examines firearms policy in the United States through the lenses of history, law, politics, and criminology. The ninth edition of the book was published in August 2023 by Routledge Publishers. My two most recent books on gun policy, Guns across America (Oxford University Press in 2015, 2017) and The Gun Dilemma (Oxford University Press, 2023), both deal extensively with the study of historical gun laws. I am frequently interviewed and quoted in the national and international media on gun-related matters. For over twenty years, I have been a member of the National Rifle Association and of the Brady

Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence.

I have provided written testimony as an expert witness in the following cases (in addition to this case): Worman v. Healey, No. 1:17-10107-WGY (D. Mass.); *Hanson v. I. INTRODUCTION

Stun guns and tasers are modern weapons that were designed or adapted for individual use as small, hand-held devices primarily by and for law enforcement and possible military applications. When these devices entered society and began to circulate, they were subject to various types of regulation, from outright bans pertaining to civilians, to permissible civilian ownership subject to a system of permitting. The purpose of this Report is to examine the development and regulation of these “conducted energy devices” (CEDs; also called “conducted electrical weapons,” or CEWs) in the light of historic government regulation of other weapons also considered dangerous, but less lethal than firearms, including fighting knives, various types of clubs, and toy guns. All follow a remarkably similar sequence of events culminating in a variety of public policy regulations.

II. THE HISTORY OF STUN GUNS AND TASERS

Stun guns are devices that use an electrical shock to disable or incapacitate another person. Early, experimental versions of such devices date back to the 1930s, and “have their roots not in policing or riot control but in farming and torture.”¹ Such early devices were cumbersome but were adapted for use in riot control in the 1950s and 1960s in the U.S. where police first used them against civil rights protestors in Southern states.² During this period stun guns were “primarily used by law enforcement agencies”³ that required the device to be in direct contact with the person subject to the electrical charge. Stun gun technology continued to advance, yielding a new generation of devices that were smaller, lighter weight, and safer for the holder of the device to operate. U.S. Army researchers were also interested in “less-lethal weapons” like stun guns.⁴

Tasers were developed by engineer Jack Cover. Working in the 1960s and 1970s, he developed what he hoped would be a non-lethal or less-than-lethal weapon to be used on airlines and by law enforcement that fired electrically charged darts attached to wires from a distance of about 20 feet. The darts delivered a 50,000 volt (high-voltage, low-amperage) charge. Cover developed the first taser prototype in 1970, which he patented in 1974 and began selling in 1974-1975, giving it the acronym-based name “TASER.”⁵ After initial skepticism on the part of law enforcement that stretched through the 1980s, police forces came to accept the taser; today over 90% of law enforcement agencies are equipped with them. Initial sales of the weapon were unregulated and thus included civilian acquisition, and some were used in crimes. Among the earliest such reported taser crimes were a gas station robbery in Miami, and the torture of a couple during a robbery in Blue Bell, Pa.⁶ (Police are not required to keep systematic records on taser and other CEW use.⁷) This, plus the fact that early tasers used gunpowder to fire the darts, prompted the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms (ATF) to classify it as a firearm, which opened the door to federal regulation. States also stepped in to impose their own restrictions.

From the 1970s through the early 2000s, at least seven states, including New York State, enacted laws that barred civilian possession of stun guns and tasers.⁸ In addition, nearly 40 localities in 15 states (aside from the seven states just mentioned) enacted similar restrictions (including cities, towns, and counties). At least 17 states and nearly 130 localities (cities, towns, counties) imposed carry bans. A handful of other localities allowed for stun gun and taser carrying with a permit.⁹ As this data shows, local governments have been especially active in enacting restrictions on stun guns and tasers.

In the 1990s researchers replaced the gunpowder propellant with compressed air, which removed it from the ATF's "firearm" category.¹⁰ This spurred manufacturers to launch aggressive campaigns to sell tasers to the general public as personal self-defense weapons.¹¹ Tasers are now capable of firing their darts, wired to the releasing device, to a distance of over 30 feet, although their optimal range is closer to 20 feet.¹²

Stun guns and tasers were developed to provide law enforcement with a non-lethal, or far less lethal alternative to the use of firearms.¹³ Yet controversy surrounding the consequences of taser use has persisted since their initial availability.¹⁴ For example, critics have noted that, from 2010 to 2021, at least 513 individuals have died in the U.S. as the result of being fired upon with tasers by police.¹⁵ From 2000 through 2020, tasers were the third leading cause of death among fatalities resulting from civilian-police encounters.¹⁶ As one scientist has noted, ““A Taser, while intended to be nonlethal, can still incur serious effects, which in some cases, can be life-threatening.””¹⁷

In addition, they continue to have criminal appeal. According to a 2012 account, stun guns and tasers “have gained popularity among robbers who use the devices to intimidate victims into cooperation.”¹⁸ The same investigation noted that “[s]tun gun-armed robberies have occurred everywhere from Bellingham [Washington] to Rockville, Md., in the past couple of years. . . .” For criminals, these weapons are reportedly appealing because they are less lethal and less expensive than firearms, are readily available, are less likely to be mistaken for firearms by police in a perpetrator-police encounter, and in most places do not result in sentence enhancement if used in crimes (unlike guns). This is further complicated by the fact that “a stun gun is a deadly weapon if used by an untrained professional, improperly, or against a vulnerable victim. . . .”¹⁹

Other analysis has emphasized the importance of training protocols for proper use of such weapons, continued research into the physiological effects of taser and stun gun use, and greater oversight of their use.²⁰ With respect to standards for using tasers, in 2005 the Police Executive

Research Forum and the International Association of Chiefs of Police both issued policy recommendations that tasers and other conducted energy devices (CEDs) “be used against only those who are actively resisting, that they not be used against minors or the elderly except in emergency situations, and that each deployment be closely supervised.”²¹ Police training experts have warned that police may at times be “too trigger-happy with stun guns,” using them too frequently or in circumstances when taser use is not called for.²² Even though most police now carry tasers, some within the law enforcement community have registered doubts about taser use and efficacy.²³ A related concern is that the operator can administer repetitive painful shocks to the victim once the darts are fired. Such torture-like repetitive shocking increases the likelihood of a fatal outcome by 50-75%.²⁴ All of these concerns and uncertainties are magnified when tasers are possessed for civilian use. Police are at least subject to supervision and training, though training standards vary. Civilians are not. Training is important to avoid abuse or misuse of stun guns and tasers. As the New York Civil Liberties Union reported, the likelihood of greater harm or danger with such weapons’ use occurs when excessive numbers or long shocks are administered, when particularly vulnerable parts of the body are hit, including the chest, neck, and genitals,²⁵ and when used against children.²⁶

Obviously, stun gun and taser technologies are relatively new. Yet an examination of weapons regulation in American history reveals that less lethal weapons—i.e., weapons other than firearms—were subject to significant, widespread, and varied regulation in addition to firearms. Historical weapons regulations extended to fighting knives and other bladed weapons, clubs, and toy guns. Historical regulations of these weapons followed a regulatory pattern remarkably similar to that of stun guns and tasers.

III. HISTORICAL RESTRICTIONS ON BOWIE KNIVES AND SIMILAR LONG-BLADED KNIVES

Note at the outset that knives and blunt objects like clubs (discussed in the next section) are not firearms. They are, however, weapons, and “arms” as that term is used in the debate over gun policy and the Second Amendment.²⁷ And while knives and clubs are certainly deadly, they are less deadly (partly because they require more concerted intent, intimacy, and force by the user) than firearms.²⁸ In that respect, they pose a direct analog to stun guns and tasers.

The ubiquity of the concern about the criminological consequences of carrying Bowie knives and other, similar long-bladed knives is seen in the widespread adoption of laws barring or restricting these weapons.²⁹ In the 1830s, at least six states enacted laws barring the carrying of

Bowie knives by name.³⁰ From then to the start of the twentieth century, every state plus the District of Columbia (with the sole exception of New Hampshire) restricted Bowie knives: a total of at least 42 states (including the District of Columbia) barred or restricted Bowie knives by name, including laws punishing concealed carry, any carry, enhanced criminal penalties, taxes on sale or ownership, barring them from named groups, and anti-brandishing laws. Another 8 states enacted laws barring the category or type of knife embodied by the Bowie knife but without mentioning them by name (see Exhibit B) totaling 49 states plus the District of Columbia.³¹

The Bowie knife is generally credited with having been invented by the brother of adventurer Jim Bowie, Rezin Bowie. The knife was named after Jim Bowie, who reputedly killed one man and wounded another using the “big knife” given to him by his brother in the alternately notorious or celebrated “Sandbar Duel” in 1827.³²

The “Bowie knife” rapidly became known beginning in the 1830s for the distinctive type of long-bladed and usually single-edged knife with a hand guard identified with Bowie, the man after whom the knife was named. While Bowie knives initially “came in a variety of forms—with or without guards, with differently shaped blades,” they eventually became more standardized as “a

Davis persuasively dismisses the claim of a blacksmith, James Black, that he invented or styled the distinctive knife for Rezin Bowie (676-77). David Kopel says, erroneously, that “Jim Bowie used a traditional knife at a famous ‘sandbar fight’ on the lower Mississippi River in 1827.” Rezin Bowie had just developed the distinctive knife his brother used in the fight, so it could not have been “traditional.” David Kopel, “Bowie knife statutes 1837-1899,” The Volokh Conspiracy, November 20, 2022, <https://reason.com/volokh/2022/11/20/bowie-knife-statutes-1837-1899/>

A. BOWIE KNIVES AND CRIME

As was true of other knives with long, thin blades,³⁷ they were widely used in fights and duels, especially at a time when single-shot pistols were often unreliable and inaccurate.³⁸ Indeed, such knives were known as “fighting knives”³⁹ that were “intended for [interpersonal] combat.”⁴⁰ In the early nineteenth century “guns and knives accounted for a growing share of the known weapons that whites used to kill whites.”⁴¹ In 1834, for example, a grand jury in Jasper County, Georgia deplored

the practice which is common amongst us with the young the middle aged and the aged to arm themselves with Pistols, dirks knives sticks & spears under the specious pretence of protecting themselves against insult, when in fact being so armed they frequently insult others with impunity, or if resistance is made the pistol dirk or club is immediately resorted to, hence we so often hear of the stabbing shooting & murdering so many of our citizens.⁴²

Homicide rates increased in the South in the early nineteenth century, as did laws restricting concealed weapons carrying. Dueling also persisted during this time, even as the practice was widely deplored by religious and other groups, in newspapers, by anti-dueling societies and political leaders.⁴³

Bowie knife writer Norm Flayderman provides abundant and prolific evidence of the spread and early criminal use of Bowie knives in the 1830s, quoting from dozens of contemporaneous newspaper and other accounts, and providing references to literally hundreds of additional articles and accounts attesting to the widespread use of Bowie knives in fights, duels, brawls and other criminal activities.⁴⁴ Flayderman concludes that, as early as 1836, “most of the American public was well aware of the Bowie knife.”⁴⁵ (Very much like the allure of contemporary assault weapons to some,⁴⁶ the Bowie knife’s notorious reputation also, if perversely, fanned its sale and acquisition.⁴⁷) All this contributed to widespread enactment of laws prohibiting dueling in the states.⁴⁸ In 1839, Congress passed a measure barring dueling in the District of Columbia.⁴⁹ Both pistols and knives were prominently used in such affairs.⁵⁰

At least three state court cases dealt in some manner with fighting knives like the Bowie knife. In the 1840 case of *Aymette v. State*⁵¹ the Supreme Court of Tennessee upheld the conviction of William Aymette for wearing a Bowie knife concealed under his clothes under a state law of 1837–1838, ch. 137, sec. 2, providing “that, if any person shall wear any bowie-knife, or Arkansas toothpick, or other knife or weapon that shall in form, shape, or size resemble a bowie-knife or Arkansas toothpick, under his clothes, or keep the same concealed about his person such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than two hundred dollars, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail not less than three months and not more than six months.”⁵² In its decision, the court concluded that the prohibition against wearing the named weapons was well justified in that they “are usually employed in private broils, and which are efficient only in the hands of the robber and the assassin.”⁵³ The court continued, “The Legislature, therefore, have a right to prohibit the wearing or keeping weapons dangerous to the peace and safety of the citizens. . . .”⁵⁴ Further, the court added that the state law existed “to preserve the public peace, and protect our citizens from the terror which a wanton and unusual exhibition of arms might produce, or their lives from being endangered by desperadoes with concealed arms. . . .”⁵⁵

Four years later, the Tennessee Supreme Court again dealt with a Bowie knife law violation and challenge. In the case of Haynes v. Tennessee (1844),⁵⁶ Stephen Haynes was indicted for carrying a concealed Bowie knife. He was convicted of wearing a knife that resembled a Bowie knife but appealed his conviction on the grounds that he was actually carrying a “Mexican pirate knife,” which reputedly had a shorter, narrower blade. (At the trial, witnesses disagreed as to the proper name for the knife in question.) He also argued that the state law, in listing various types of knives including those “similar” to Bowie knives, was “too indefinite” and could therefore lead to “absurd consequences” that “must follow its enforcement. . . .”⁵⁷ On appeal, the court upheld his conviction and commended the Tennessee state legislature’s enactment: “The design of the statute was to prohibit the wearing of bowie knives and others of a similar description, which the experience of the country had proven to be extremely dangerous and destructive to human life; the carrying of which by truculent and evil disposed persons but too often ended in assassination.”⁵⁸ The court continued: “The design, meaning, and intent was to guard against the destruction of human life, by prohibiting the wearing [of] heavy, dangerous, destructive knives, the only use of which is to kill. . . .”⁵⁹ The court noted that the state law “wisely provides against bowie knives, Arkansas tooth picks, or any other weapon in form, shape or size, resembling them.”⁶⁰ Noting the similarity among knives and the possibility of an unjust outcome where, say, a person might be convicted of carrying a mere pocket knife, the court posed this question: “what is to protect against conviction, when the words of the statute cover the charge, and its true spirit and meaning does not?” Their answer: “the judge and jury who try the case.”⁶¹ As the author of a book on Bowie knives noted, “the fact that the term ‘bowie knife’ had never been precisely defined did not help his [Haynes’s] case.”⁶²

A third state court case relevant to the legal status of Bowie knives is Cockrum v. State of Texas, 1859.⁶³ The Cockrum case involved John Cockrum, who was charged with the murder of his brother-in-law, William Self, with a Bowie knife.⁶⁴ Under Texas law, “a homicide, which would otherwise be a case of manslaughter, if committed with a bowie-knife or dagger, shall be deemed murder and punished as such. . . .”⁶⁵ The court upheld the added penalty provision of the law relating to use of a Bowie knife, despite the court’s very expansive interpretation of the right to bear arms, but reversed and remanded the man’s conviction because of an error related to statutory changes and jury instructions. It described the Bowie knife as “an exceeding destructive Constitution/2ll/2ndcourt/state/177st.htm. David Kopel says that a fourth case, Nunn v. State, 1 Ga. 243 (1846), is a “major state supreme court case[s] involving Bowie knives.” “The legal history of bans on firearms and Bowie knives before 1900,” The Volokh Conspiracy, November 20, 2022, <https://reason.com/volokh/2022/11/20/the-legal-history-of-bans-on-firearms-and-bowie-knives-before-1900/>. But Nunn involved a man who was prosecuted for carrying a pistol (openly, not concealed), not a knife. A state law criminalized concealed carry of various named weapons, including pistols and Bowie knives, whereas a different provision allowed for open carrying of named weapons, including Bowie knives, but failed to include pistols on that list. Noting the “great vagueness” in the statute’s wording, the court reversed the man’s conviction and wrote that there was a constitutional right to open carry “for the important end to be attained: the rearing up and qualifying a well-regulated militia, so vitally necessary to the security of a free State.” By contrast, the court upheld the constitutionality of the concealed carry restrictions and noted that those restrictions were enacted “to guard and protect the citizens of the State against the unwarrantable and too prevalent use of deadly weapons.” 246; italics in original.

weapon,” an “instrument of almost certain death,” and “the most deadly of all weapons in common use.”⁶⁶ Further, the court said: “He who carries such a weapon. . .makes himself more dangerous to the rights of others, considering the frailties of human nature, than if he carried a less dangerous weapon.”⁶⁷

All of these cases underscore courts’ recognition of the dangerous nature and nefarious use of Bowie knives not only by their characterizations of them, but by the fact that they are treated in the same restrictive and prohibitory manner in law as other dangerous, deadly weapons including pistols and various named clubs.⁶⁸

For example, 15 states banned all carrying of Bowie knives (by banning both concealed carry and open carry), while others imposed taxes on individuals’ acquisition or possession of them. Georgia sought to stamp out Bowie knife circulation (as well as that of other named weapons) in Kopel says, incorrectly, that “Bowie knives. . . were regulated the same as a butcher’s knife.” According to the Duke Center for Firearms Law Repository of Historical Gun Laws (<https://firearmslaw.duke.edu/repository/search-the-repository/>) six states had laws that restricted butcher knives by name, whereas 42 states restricted Bowie knives by name. ⁶⁸ Among the notorious incidents attached to the Bowie knife was its use by two of the conspirators in the Lincoln assassination in 1865. The plan was to assassinate President Lincoln, Vice President Andrew Johnson, and Secretary of State William Seward. The man assigned to attack Seward, Lewis Powell, entered the Seward home armed with a pistol and a Bowie knife. When one of Seward’s sons tried to stop him, Powell tried to shoot him, but his gun misfired, so he used it as a club against the son. When he encountered another son, Powell slashed him with his Bowie knife, the weapon he then used to attack Seward who, thanks to a neck collar, survived. John Wilkes Booth also carried what was later identified as a Bowie knife which he used to slash the man who accompanied Lincoln to the theater and who tried to stop Booth after he shot the president. Booth slashed the man in the arm with his knife to make his escape.

an 1837 law: “it shall not be lawful for any merchant, or vender of wares or merchandize in this State, or any other person or persons whatsoever, to sell, or offer to sell, or to keep, or to have about their person or elsewhere, any of the hereinafter described weapons . . . Bowie, or any other kinds of knives, manufactured and sold for the purpose of wearing, or carrying the same as arms of offence or defense, pistols, dirks, sword canes, spears, &c.”⁶⁹ The desirability and utility of concealed-carry restrictions was precisely that they pushed dangerous weapons out of public spaces and places, improving public safety through the deterrent and punishment effects of such laws, and also discouraging the settlement of private grievances and disputes in public through weapons-fueled violence.

States were imaginative and persistent in their effort to suppress fighting knives and other weapons. For example, an 1881 Arkansas law combined no-carry provisions (whether concealed or openly) applying to “any dirk or bowie knife, or a sword, or a spear in a cane, brass or metal knuck[le]s, razor, or any pistol of any kind whatever” with another provision in the same law that made it a misdemeanor to “sell, barter or exchange, or otherwise dispose of, or in any manner furnish to any person” the aforementioned weapons, including “any kind of cartridge.”⁷⁰ Even though the law allowed persons to have the weapons on their own premises, it begs the question of how, exactly, a person could legally obtain such weapons in the first place if they weren’t already owned within a family before the 1881 law was enacted.

States relied on a variety of regulatory techniques to suppress Bowie knife carrying: 29 states enacted laws to bar their concealed carry; 15 states barred their carry whether concealed or openly;

⁶⁹ 1837 Ga. Acts 90, An Act to Guard and Protect the Citizens of this State, Against the Unwarrantable and too Prevalent use of Deadly Weapons, § 1.

7 states enacted enhanced criminal penalties for those who used the knives to commit a crime; 4 states enacted regulatory taxes attached to their commercial sale; 3 states imposed a tax for those who owned the knives; 10 states barred their sale to specified groups of people; and 4 states enacted penalties for brandishing the knives (see Exhibits B and D). In addition, these laws would often expressly exempt from restriction common pocket knives.⁷¹

B. DIFFICULTIES IN PROHIBITING KNIFE POSSESSION

The extensive and ubiquitous nature of these Bowie knife prohibitions raises a further question: given the universal agreement that these knives were dangerous, why not simply ban their possession outright? The answer is two-fold. First, America was a developing nation-state in the nineteenth century. The federal and state governments did not yet possess the maturity, powers, tools, or resources to implement any measure as sweeping as a knife ban, especially since knives are technologically very simple to produce, and metal-working was a common and ordinary part of everyday life. After all, the front-line administrative entity on which we today rely for law enforcement, the police, barely existed in the way we think of policing today in most places in most of nineteenth century (up to this time policing fell to a haphazard mix of the watch system, constables, militias, and vigilantes). Modern police forces only came in to being in a handful of large cities before the Civil War, and did not reach maturity until the early twentieth century.⁷²

Second, the chief (though not only) remedy enacted by the states to address the problem of knife fighting was both more focused and feasible: to bar the carrying of knives, along with the other two categories of weapons that also threatened public safety, clubs and pistols. The fact that all three types of weapons—knives, clubs, and pistols—were consistently treated together is conclusive evidence that all were considered so dangerous and inimical to public safety that they were subject to anti-carry and other restrictive laws and bundled together in legislative enactments.

IV. HISTORICAL RESTRICTIONS ON CLUBS AND OTHER BLUNT WEAPONS

Among the most widely and ubiquitously regulated harmful implements in U.S. history were various types of clubs and other blunt weapons (see Exhibit C). Most were anti-carry laws, which also generally encompassed pistols and specific types of knives, although some of the laws extended prohibitions to these weapons' manufacture, possession, sale, or use in crime.⁷³ As Exhibit C shows, at least five distinct types of clubs and blunt objects were regulated in the United States. Notably, every state in the nation had laws restricting one or more types of clubs. According to a detailed reference book on the subject of these blunt instruments by Robert Escobar, they were considered “objectionable objects, once feared but now forgotten.”⁷⁴ Escobar provides what he calls “a family history” of these blunt weapons, but adding that “[i]t’s a disreputable family to say the least, black sheep even within the study of weaponry.”⁷⁵ They have been described as standing police force in 1845, followed by Chicago in 1851, Philadelphia in 1854, and Baltimore in 1857 (23). Jill Lepore, “The Invention of the Police,” The New Yorker, July 13, 2020, <https://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2020/07/20/the-invention-of-the-police>. Both McNab and Lepore emphasize the role of slavery and slave suppression as key to the development of policing. Had there been no slavery in the U.S., however, policing would have been no less necessary.

⁷³ E.g. see 1917 Cal. Sess. Laws 221-225; 1923 Cal. Stat. 695.

“wicked, cowardly, ‘Soaked in blood and cured in whiskey.’”⁷⁶ Those who carried them (excluding police) “were called vicious, devils and lurking highwaymen.”⁷⁷ These club-type blunt objects compose a family of objects used for striking others, and while they vary in name and construction, the categories are “somewhat fluid.”⁷⁸

Among the five types of clubs regulated in U.S. laws, 15 states barred bludgeon carrying. A bludgeon is a short stick with a thickened or weighted end used as a weapon.⁷⁹ The earliest state anti-bludgeon law was in 1799; 12 such state laws were enacted in the 1700s and 1800s, and 4 in the early 1900s (as with each of these chronological categories, the state law total exceeds the total number of states because some states enacted the same or similar laws in multiple centuries).

A billy (sometimes spelled billie) club is a heavy, hand-held rigid club,⁸⁰ usually made of wood, plastic, or metal,⁸¹ that is traditionally carried by police, often called a nightstick or baton.⁸² Escobar cites an early reference to the billy club in an 1854 New Orleans newspaper article in the Daily True Delta that referred to “police armed with batons,”⁸³ a synonym for a billy club. As this reference suggests, police have long adopted the billy club, or similar striking implements, as part of their on-duty weaponry. At least 16 states had anti-billy club laws, totaling 46 laws; the earliest law appears to have been enacted in Kansas in 1862,⁸⁴ followed by a New York law in 1866.⁸⁵

Fourteen states enacted such laws in the 1800s; 11 states did so in the early 1900s.

At least 14 states barred the carrying of “clubs” more generically, without specifying the type. The oldest anti-club law was 1664; 7 states enacted these laws in the 1600s-1700s, 7 states in the 1800s, and 2 in the early 1900s.

Anti-slungshot laws were enacted by 43 states, with 71 laws enacted in the 1800s and 12 in the 1900s. A slungshot (or slung shot), also referred to as “a type of blackjack,”⁸⁶ is a hand-held weapon for striking that has a piece of metal or stone at one end attached to a flexible strap or handle that was developed roughly in the 1840s (the first “known use” of slungshot was 1842⁸⁷). By one account, “[s]lungshots were widely used by criminals and street gang members in the 19th Century. They had the advantages of being easy to make and conceal, silent, and very effective, particularly against an unsuspecting opponent. This gave them a dubious reputation, similar to that of switchblade knives in the 1950s, and they were outlawed in most jurisdictions. Their use as a criminal weapon continued at least up until the early 1920s.”⁸⁸ Escobar concurs that slungshots and blackjack “were a regular part of criminal weaponry. . .and gangsters could be merciless in their use.”⁸⁹

In a criminal case considered the most famous of those involving lawyer Abraham Lincoln, the future president defended a man charged with murdering another using a slungshot. In the 1858 trial of William “Duff” Armstrong, Lincoln succeeded in winning Armstrong’s acquittal.⁹⁰

These technologically very simple weapons were viewed as especially dangerous or harmful when they emerged in society, given the ubiquity of state laws against carrying them enacted after their development and their spreading use by criminals and as fighting implements. These devices were developed and appeared in society during an identifiable period of time in the mid-nineteenth century, sparking subsequent wide-ranging prohibitions. The earliest anti-slungshot law was enacted in 1850; 43 states legislated against them in the 1800s (including the District of Columbia), and 11 states in the early 1900s (note this incorporates multiple laws enacted in more than one century by a few states).

Sandbags, also known as sand clubs, were also a specific focus in anti-carry laws as well. Consisting of nothing more than sand poured into a bag, sack, sock, or similar tube-shaped fabric (although the weight could also be something dense and heavy, like a lock in the end of a sock),⁹¹ their particular appeal was that they could be dispensed with by simply pouring the sand out, leaving nothing more than an empty cloth bag. (Alternately, they could be made heavier by adding water to the sand.) The first anti-sandbag law was 1866, with 10 states enacting such laws—7 in the 1800s and 7 in the early 1900s. Only 4 states did not have any prohibitions in any of these categories of clubs and similar striking weapons, but 3 of those 4 (Montana, Ohio, and Washington State) had blanket legislative provisions against the carrying of any concealed/dangerous/deadly weapons. One state, New Hampshire, may not have enacted such a law during this time but did at some point.⁹²

V. TOY GUNS

A final historical analog to modern stun guns and tasers is found in historic restrictions on toy guns. Dating to the nineteenth century, toy guns encompassed a variety of usually realistic-looking weapons that lacked the firepower and deadliness of traditional firearms, but that nevertheless were dangerous and posed a risk to society.

The earliest such toy guns included cap guns, which were developed at the close of the Civil War (1861-1865) by shotgun manufacturers seeking a new device to manufacture and sell after the war ended.⁹³ Early cap guns “used some form of mild explosive to create a popping sound and puff of smoke when the toy's trigger was pulled.”⁹⁴ The first BB guns were developed in 1886, as were so-called “penny guns,” inexpensive, non-functional copies of real guns.⁹⁵ By one account, gun companies developed toy pistols, at first made from iron, “in order to stay in business” after ⁹² Up to 2010, New Hampshire had this law on the books: “159:16 Carrying or Selling Weapons. Whoever, except as provided by the laws of this state, sells, has in his possession with intent to sell, or carries on his person any stiletto, switch knife, blackjack, dagger, dirk-knife, slung shot, or metallic knuckles shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and such weapon or articles so carried by him shall be confiscated to the use of the state.” In 2010, the law was amended when it enacted HB 1665 to exclude stilettos, switch knives, daggers, and dirk-knives. Compare N.H. Rev. Stat. § 159:16 with 2010 New Hampshire Laws Ch. 67 (H.B. 1665). In 1923, New Hampshire enacted an extensive licensing system for handgun carrying: 1923 N.H. Laws 138.

Civil War demobilization.⁹⁶ Other early toy guns subject to restriction included air guns⁹⁷ and spring guns.⁹⁸

As early as 1875, the New York Times opined about the dangerous spread of toy guns. The article was prompted by a court case where the father of a 13-year old boy who lost an eye to a toy gun discharged by another boy sued the family of the boy who fired the toy gun for damages. The judge in the case dismissed the suit, prompting the Times writer to say that a “father who buys deadly weapons for his children, instead of any of the hundreds of harmless toys that are always on sale, should be responsible legally as well as morally for any consequences that may ensue.”⁹⁹ An article appearing in the Baltimore Sun in 1881 reported on a 13-year old boy who accidentally shot himself in the hand with a projectile from a toy pistol, leading the boy to develop a fatal lockjaw (tetanus) infection.¹⁰⁰

In the late 1800s and early 1900s, in reaction to increased circulation of toy guns and growing reports of injuries and deaths resulting from them, states and localities moved to restrict toy guns, including their sale, manufacture, discharge, or carry. Researcher Catie Carberry identified at least seven states that enacted toy gun restrictions just in the 1880s in a 2019 article.¹⁰¹

My research has identified at least 19 states that enacted anti-toy gun laws just in the 1880s. From the 1880s through the early 1900s, a total of at least 31 states enacted anti-toy gun laws.¹⁰² The majority of these laws made it a crime to sell, give, or otherwise pass to minors toy guns and other dangerous weapons or items, like fireworks and firecrackers, sometimes with parental exceptions. However, a considerable number of laws restricted toy guns and like items regardless of the age of the person, such as this 1882 Vermont law:

A person who has in his possession a toy pistol for the explosion of percussion caps or blank cartridges, with intent to sell or give away the same, or sells or gives away, or offers to sell or give away the same, shall be fined not more than ten nor less than five dollars; and shall be liable for all damages resulting from such selling or giving away, to be recovered in an action on the case.¹⁰³

Other anti-toy gun laws that restricted access to them by anyone, regardless of age, included measures enacted by Baltimore, Md. (1881), Wisconsin (1882), Maine (1883), Utah (1884), Indiana (1885), and Arkansas (1909).¹⁰⁴ Concerns about toy guns persisted well into the twentieth century. For example, in the 1930s organizations of mothers held bonfire burnings of toy guns that resembled gangster weapons. In 1955, New York City banned black, blue and silver toy guns.¹⁰⁵

CONCLUSION

All of the weapons discussed in this Report—tasers and stun guns, fighting knives, clubs and similar striking implements, and toy guns—follow a nearly identical regulatory pattern. First, a new weapon or weapons technology is invented or developed; second, it might be patented;¹⁰⁶ third, it was usually developed for military or law enforcement use (though not in the case of toy guns); fourth, at some point the weapon spreads to civil society; and fifth, if it becomes associated with criminality or poses a public health or safety problem, calls for regulation ensue.¹⁰⁷ What is also significant about the weapons and dangerous devices examined here is that they are all dangerous, but also less lethal than firearms. Thus, these historical weapons restrictions are remarkably analogous to contemporary restrictions on stun guns and tasers.

As discussed in this Report, stun guns and tasers were developed for use by law enforcement as an alternative to firearms. Reports of misuse of such devices by police, who receive training in their use, suggest that adverse or unjustified use and results would only be greater in civilian hands, as these devices pose a greater hazard when used by people who are untrained in their use and consequences (training is not required for civilians in places where they are legal for them to own). Stun guns and tasers have been identified as used by criminals to intimidate and even torture victims. In short, the history of these devices, when considered in the light of historical non-firearm regulations in American history as discussed here, militates in favor of current legal restrictions in New York.

The first purpose of any government is to protect the lives, health, and safety of its people.¹⁰⁸ The many laws examined in this Report arise from this central fact of governance. This

The knives and clubs discussed here were not patented, but historically other weapons and weapons technologies were.
